

Tall thin clients buy more equities than short fat clients, study shows

By Editorial Staff Fri, Oct 21, 2016

People who got taller faster as teenagers were likely to participate in high school sports and activities correlated with higher teenage self-esteem, generating a long-lasting effect related to how they invest their money later in life, according to a new study.
